Risk Alert – Fraudsters Disguised as Financial Institutions

Financial intuitions around the country are reporting phishing attacks on accountholders where criminals are posing as a fraud team representative from the institution.

In these attacks, the fraudster calls, texts, or emails the accountholder to “verify” multiple pieces of private information so they can gain access to the account and drain it of funds. In many instances, criminals “spoof” the financial institution’s phone number so it shows up as such on the accountholder’s caller IDs. Information requested of the accountholder includes, •Online banking user name and password •PIN number •Security codes •Account number •Card number

MCFCU does not call, text or email our members requesting this private information.

DO NOT give out any information! Please call us or sign onto our secure net branch to send a message or check your account. Never allow anyone to sign onto your computer at any time.
